“ONE OUT OF MANY: IMMIGRANTS, REFUGEES AND THEIR INCORPORATION INTO AMERICAN SOCIETY
1798 - 2002

The dawn of a new century, the continuing movement of migrants back and forth across our national borders, the current debate over immigration restriction and immigrant rights, the harsh treatment of newcomers from the Middle East since 9/11, and the burst of patriotism, even xenophobia since last September’s crisis, all encourage reassessment of what it means to become an American. Conflicts between Americans who see immigration as an alien invasion and others who view it as an opportunity for economic and cultural renewal persist. Equally tenacious are racial and religious tensions among groups who have been in the United States for centuries. Such contentiousness further emphasizes the complex and uneven pattern whereby migrants -- whether voluntary or forced -- and their descendants negotiate places in American life or don’t.

This course explores obstacles and incentives to the incorporation of Irish, Italian, Eastern European, Asian, Caribbean, and Latino arrivals from the perspective of both newcomers and natives, respectively, during the past two centuries. Fiction, film, and immigrant autobiographies explore how racial, gender, and class identities have shaped newcomers’ struggles to embrace American opportunity without relinquishing their pasts even as Americans have mused over how wide open to leave the “golden door.”

REQUIREMENTS AND OTHER INFORMATION

A. Each student will be responsible for one class discussion, two book reviews, and a 25 page research paper. There will be no mid-term exam and a written final examination on Tuesday, December 17th.

B. Class discussion. Each student will be responsible for one class discussion during the semester. The student will begin with a twenty-minute to half hour presentation of what the most important issues are that particular week and present the class with some questions for discussion derived from the reading.

C. Book reviews. Book reviews by individual students are designed to introduce an awareness and understanding of important works that time does not permit to be included among the core readings. For the benefit of all in the class, each review will be presented orally as well as in writing. Oral reports MAY NOT BE READ and should be no more than ten to fifteen minutes in length. A student who has a special interest in a topic may arrange to offer a book review the same week that he or she leads the class discussion. Written reports should be no more than five or six pages and include the following information (not necessarily in this order):

a) Author, full title of book, publisher, date of original publication, number of pages.

b) Brief summary of the book, with special attention to the author’s thesis and sub-theses.

c) Evaluation and critical commentary.

d) Description and assessment of sources and methodology.

Reports must be word processed with care to organization, structure, punctuation, spelling, clarity, accuracy, and correctness of style. Even if you use spell check and grammar check, you must PROOF READ!

D. Research papers. Each student is required to write a 25 page term paper on a subject decided upon after consultation with the instructor. Three-page proposals are due on Tuesday, September 25th. It is suggested that those students who are thinking about dissertation topics or are engaged in dissertation research try to link their topic to their broader interests. Primary sources must be used and standard citation forms are required (either footnote or endnote). PAPERS ARE DUE ON Tuesday, December 3rd.

E. Grades: There will be a penalty of ½ grade per day for each day late papers are submitted

F. CLASSROOM PROTOCOL: Attendance is required at all class sessions. Students absent more than twice during the semester must meet with the instructor. Lateness is discouraged because it disrupts the class. Chronic lateness will result in the student being asked to drop the course. All cell phones and beepers must be turned off before class begins. Students whose cell phones ring during class or who check E-mail during class will be asked to leave the room for the remainder of the class period. Coffee or soda may be brought to class, but no food of any kind. It is preferred that gentlemen remove their hats during class.
